Mimo seu desligar One of the most important and effective ways to get to know more about yourself is to review your feelings about experiences and situations. Looking at yourself and what you feel is especially helpful in shedding light on your mental health. In my writing, I try to share insights and experiences, but I often start a post with an example of my life and the reasons behind my interest. This post (starting with an example of a bad experience I had) is an attempt to start to deal with some of my current feelings about my medical issues. Please bear with me, I'm still a work in progress. Embracing Feedback A few months ago I was in a very bad mood. As I was taking a shower one morning, I suddenly felt a sharp pain in the back of my head. I don't know how I did it, but I managed to calm myself down and look for some object that would help me to endure the pain. That was a mistake. I sat on a small stool, hoping that I would not pass out. I did not. I did not feel any relief. I was angry with myself, I was ashamed. I wanted to end my life, I cursed myself for my stupidity. This is how I felt for some hours. Here's the deal: the way I felt had nothing to do with my pain. I was not mad at myself for passing out, I was mad at myself for being dumb enough to think that I could just sit there and endure. I thought I was being brave, even though in reality, I was being stupid. Because of that, I wanted to end my life. Why the hell would I want to do that? As this feeling started to fade, I started to feel guilty. What if this whole situation was God's way of telling me to be a better person? If I were to die, I would surely burn in hell for the rest of my life. That thought quickly changed my perspective on life. Doing a Review To be honest, my moods have improved over the years. I have definitely made progress. However, I have some serious limits, and when I feel my limits have been passed, my moods get ugly. I know this is not really how you want to start a blog, but bear with me, I will try to be brief. When I feel my moods are too high, I try to 82157476af
